Hampden-Sydney Happenings

Television cameras invaded the campus this year as President Bunting was interviewed by Bill Moyers (far left), WWBT (left), and the Lynchburg evening news (bottom).

Vandals damaged several cars on campus during the autumn (above), but students soon found alternate methods of transportation including skydiving (right) and a garnet and grey Cougar raffled off by WWHS (upper right).

Students grappled with major social issues including the nuclear power debate (right and below), American responsibility regarding the world poverty (far right), and the evolutionist's world view (bottom right). Perhaps the greatest debate centered around the SALT II treaty, and the Hampden-Sydney conference on that subject attracted students, political theorists, and legislators from across the country.

The Gospel According to PEANUTS

Speakers of all types came to Hampden-Sydney this year. Among them were (clockwise from right): Dr. William Hoffman, noted author and H-S professor; Jerry Rubin, Chicago Seven defendant and anti-war activist; Admiral J.B. Stockdale, Medal of Honor winner and Viet Cong P.O.W.; Dr. Henry J. Abraham, Constitutional scholar; and Robert Short, evangelist. Other speakers included Dr. Richard Pipes of Harvard University and Nobel Peace Prize winner Betty Williams.

There was music for all tastes as Hampden-Sydney hosted such artists as blues guitarist James Thomas (left and far left), the Moonlighters (bottom), and classical pianists John Loving and Melody Green (below). The last pair were featured in one of several afternoon recitals by members of the Hampden-Sydney community.

"By the way, what's the word on the yearbook?" ... late nights, early mornings ... Board of Publications meetings ... the new and wonderful Photo Service ... color photos that took five months to arrive having been printed wrong, disappeared, visited Viet Nam, and gone on summer vacation ... "Never again!" ... The 1980 Kaleidoscope was printed on 256 pages by the Hunter Publishing Company of Winston-Salem, North Carolina ... pages 1-16 and 129-144 were printed on Saxony paper and the remainder on dull-finish ... All 800 copies were long-bound with headbands between 160 pt. binders board and #136 endsheets ... The cover was Red Lexotone (#5015) embossed with grain pattern #20 with a black overtone and applied color (#24 gray) ... Style B ad borders were used. ... Most copy was printed using Melior type: body copy was in 10 pt. (lead); captions in 8 pt. (lead); and Seniors in 10 pt. with 8 pt. captions ... All headlines were Melior Bold except for those on the cover, divider pages, and faculty pages which were Helvetica Black Italic of the same size as their lines ... Because photos and statistics were unavailable for many athletic teams, a free-form layout was used similar to that used by Georgetown's Ye Olde Domesday Book and Chapel Hill's Yakkety-Yak ... Most Hampden-Sydney students will recognize the layout pattern used for the essays as coming from a popular monthly magazine ... The staff of the 1980 Kaleidoscope consisted of Editor Sean Wallace, Business Manager John Corey, and several score more who helped by "looking at a few of these pictures."

BY RUSSELL G. TINDALL

Rusty was valedictorian for the class of 1980. This essay is an adaptation of his commencement address.

STRIVE UNDERSTAND

We are now faced with new decisions, new goals, or the extension of old goals. For all of us this is both an exciting and confusing transition period. We have accomplished a great deal but still the surface is only scratched, and yet it is a time that is supposed to be filled with pride and satisfaction. I feel the stress, for all around I hear words of dissatisfaction, words of disillusionment, of bitterness or even indifference, with respect to this college. I don't suppose that these feelings are tremendously unnatural for someone in our position, but the next step always makes the previous one seem somewhat less significant. I also imagine that it may be beyond our capabilities at this point to understand fully the experience we have just been through. This seems a great shame, however, because, when we fail to appreciate the events and circumstances that shape our lives most drastically, we often lack the initiative to expose ourselves fully to and take advantage of the opportunities that are presented to us on the road to self-discovery.

At Hampden-Sydney we had these opportunities and, if we seized at least a few of them, we will not be leaving the school behind but will carry the Hampden-Sydney experience with us as an integral part of our development as individuals. But what does this mean? What has made our time here so significant and so meaningful?

Among the first things that come to mind are fellow students around us now. In the classroom, on the athletic field, on the Circle, we have succeeded together and we have failed together. I think school-wide camaraderie is still questionable, but intense individual friendships are a concrete reality here. After we have all gone our separate ways I doubt whether we will ever forget that special person who lent his support when we needed it the most.

Secondly, this class has witnessed the College taking huge strides toward delivering a higher quality education and toward becoming a higher quality institution in general. This has required the efforts of many dedicated and hard-working administrators, faculty members, alumni, parents, and students themselves. Such growth is neither an easy nor painless process; yet the results are very impressive: the field house, Graham Hall, the Rhetoric Program, the Honors Program, expanded athletic schedules, an excellent career placement office, the Hampden Fellows series, and the list goes on. When we include the various student activities on campus where we as students could have a direct impact on the affairs and reputation of this school, we see that the College has much to offer. Whether we investigate any of these various avenues is another matter, but before we complain and criticize, let's explore that matter thoroughly.

The real key, however, for what Hampden-Sydney really should mean to each and every one of us is the admirable education we have received and the men and women behind that education. Here again, not everyone values highly the hours in class and the hours spent at the desk and in the lab. We often allow our social duties to blind us so that we see our mentors as crushing tyrants, rather than the concerned educators that they really are. I'm not saying that the confrontations between ourselves on the one hand and the faculty and administration on the other were in vain; both groups argued their points well. We all make mistakes, and we all make faulty judgements, and changing the students' viewpoints is going to involve great controversy anyway. But the fact is, all too often when you go to the other side of the coin, this College is striving to turn certain ideals into reality — ideals that deal with how the school can best prepare us to be solid productive citizens — ideals that we all pay great lip service to but which are basically worthless if we do not demand excellence of ourselves, of peers, and of the institution.

These teachers and administrators with us today are not simply brilliant academicians, standing at the lecturn and throwing out bits and pieces from their impressive stores of knowledge. Their main purpose, and I believe that they accomplish this purpose very admirable if we let them, is to challenge us — challenge us to see the law in our own eyes, challenge our own thoughts and opinions, challenge our perseverance, creativity, and self-expression, challenge us to think hard about our aspirations and to look at ourselves and see where we are headed and where we have been. And the truly great thing about Hampden-Sydney is the direct contact we have had between individuals and their openness in sharing their wisdom and experience. We've had the chance to see them not as intimidating intellectuals but as concerned friends — friends who have been where we are now and are willing to guide us toward a meaningful future. The opportunity is here.

So we now depart from Hampden-Sydney and enter a situation which will be vastly different from our experience here. But the difficult tasks remain: the finding of a role, the finding of a purpose, and fully discovering who you really are. Keep your eyes open, keep your minds open, do not let any experience slip by without full examination. And when we leave today and find ourselves faced with new obstacles, new problems, new adventures, let's reflect on whether we pondered the valuable lessons of this college and whether we will continue to examine the lessons of any situation we may find ourselves in — all with the openness and with the tolerance and with the courage that a liberal education should inspire and which this complex and troubled world now so desperately needs.

JOSIAH BUNTING, III

By any reckoning, self-reliance of mind and
integrity of character
are fundamental.

The goal of education at Hampden-Sydney is the development of intellectual self-reliance and moral courage. By any reckoning, self-reliance of mind and integrity of character are fundamental to our graduates' recognition of a lifelong obligation to give service and leadership: to profession, to community, to the Republic, to the human brotherhood.

The College's history speaks eloquently of the powerful and enduring character of the ideals of self-reliance and service, and of its own two-hundred years' commitment to the value of self-reliant, disciplined intellect in public life; of intellect prepared to scrutinize history in order to discern what is permanent, but without (in the words of a Founding Trustee) "blind veneration for antiquity, for custom, for names"; finally of character able and unafraid to act upon the imperatives of careful intellection.

Our insistence upon the development of self-reliance, and our recognition of the obligation to give service, inhere both in a view of history and a calculation of the needs of the future. We believe in the particular fitness of Hampden-Sydney to serve those needs. We are a small college, wholly residential, remote from places which distract from peace of mind and the development of character. We work to instill those qualities of active tolerance, generosity of spirit, kindness, and devotion to truth which are needed to make a small community live productively.

Hampden-Sydney is a college of liberal education. We believe that liberal education is useful education, and that it is a sustaining prerequisite to productive lives and useful professional careers. Liberal education aims to assist students to free themselves from ignorance, malice, prejudice, and superstition; from the tyranny of intellectual selfishness; from impotence in judging the claims and values of experts. It teaches students to gather evidence patiently; it educates them to write and speak with force, precision, and clarity; it encourages them to seek refreshment and inspiration in the fine arts. As Hampden-Sydney conceives it, liberal education is that which will regenerate and sustain itself. It will make our graduates lifelong students — men for whom the new is not a stimulus to suspicion or fear, but a source of interest and fascination.

If it is true that genius flourishes in solitude, while character is strengthened in the intercourse of public life, then the history and future of Hampden-Sydney are a testimonial to the College's singular genius for producing graduates who are both men of the intellect and men of action — men who will esteem public service, broadly conceived, their highest calling, and whose ambition is but a felt obligation to serve more deeply.

You are obliged to proceed, in education, in life, upon the assumption that man can, at the same time, serve and prevail — whether that be an assumption or a belief. Work, therefore, in College, to develop a self-reliant mind, a mind never so at productive peace as when alone; and with self-reliance of intellect, prepare to live that precious quality of moral courage — the active disposition to speak up, to choose the unpopular course, if necessary, and the self discipline to remain on that course. It is these things that must be your goals, your missions in College.

DEMOCRACY AND THE LIBERAL ARTS

In his History of the Peloponnesian War, Thucydides supplies us with a provocative examination of the fragile quality of "civilization." The impression conveyed by this work is that "civilization" is like an island in the midst of barbarism; and, as such, it is constantly in need of thoughtful protection. That the good or decent or desirable political community is constantly endangered both from those who would corrupt it intentionally as well as from those who seek to perfect it beyond the capacity of its nature has been a perennial theme in tragic literature, witness Sophocles' Antigone and Shakespeare's King Lear. For Thucydides, the future of "civilization" depends on an appreciation of the nature and limits of the political community and of political life in general. Thus the declaration in his History: "It will be enough for men . . . if these words of mine are judged useful by those who want to understand clearly the events which happened in the past and which (human nature being what it is) will, at some time or other and in much the same ways, be repeated in the future. My work is not a piece of writing designed to meet the test of an immediate public, but was done to last forever." By design, then, Thucydides' political history is meant to be a "possession for all times" that will enable its readers over time to enter into a higher understanding of the universal themes of political existence.

For the ancient philosophers generally, education, or more appropriately phrased, right education, is indispensable to preserving the "best," the "noblest," and the most "decent" qualities in political communities. This is no less true in the case of our democratic republic than of Plato's ideal republic or Aristotle's polity. In fact, it was precisely with reference to modern democracies like America's that Tocqueville observed in the 1830's: "The nations of our day cannot prevent conditions of equality from spreading in their midst. But it depends upon themselves whether equality is to lead to servitude or freedom, knowledge or barbarism, prosperity or wretchedness." Clearly, to be discharged well this exercise demands a capacity to discriminate between "servitude and freedom, knowledge and barbarism, prosperity and wretchedness."

Here, then, is the rub and the great responsibility entrusted to institutions like Hampden-Sydney College. And here, as well, is the appropriate response to the question, "What is the place and role of Hampden-Sydney in American education?" For a variety of reasons, both too numerous and too complicated to examine in detail here, it has been left to the Hampden-Sydneys to supply the careful instruction in the contrasting ends and limitations of communities that is essential if we are to protect the integrity of "civilization" in the full sense of that term for an ancient theorist like Thucydides and a modern one like Tocqueville.

Quite obviously, not just any form of education will satisfy the great objectives identified by the greatest minds or overcome the forces that Tocqueville believed are at work in democratic times. What is required is a form of instruction that compels students to address the perennial issues and problems bearing on the proper way of life for man. This, in turn, demands an appreciation of the decisive human questions and a capacity to critically assess the virtues and limitations of competing responses to these questions. This is precisely what the Hampden-Sydneys can do best. Both in terms of their tradition on the one hand, and the intimacy and intensity of their academic program on the other, small liberal arts colleges like Hampden-Sydney are peculiarly poised to cultivate the kind of a dialectic that can lead students to replace mere opinion by knowledge, or at least more perfect knowledge, of the perennial issues. Needless to say, tradition alone is insufficient. What is required is a curriculum that imparts a substantive body of knowledge and the critical habits of mind that together are equal to the responsibilities that Thucydides and Tocqueville took for granted, and a faculty seriously committed to this kind of instruction.

This enterprise takes on a special significance in democratic republics. Unlike regimes based on the rule of one or the rule of a few, the quality of a democracy depends on the capacities of all its citizens. To be decent and defensible, democratic government, or self-government, requires a self-disciplined and enlightened citizen body. This en-

It has been left to the Hampden-Sydneys to supply the careful instruction in the contrasting ends and limitations of communities that is essential if we are to protect the integrity of civilization.

tails, among other things, a citizenry capable of recognizing that occasionally the government cannot, or even should not, satisfy the preferences of the people. In short, the fragile quality of the "decent" political community should inform the very "mores" of the people. At the end, then, as at the beginning, we must confront the teachings contained in such works as Thucydides' History and Tocqueville's Democracy in America on the nature and limits of a way of life appropriate to man. Here is the essential core of the education that must be supplied by the Hampden-Sydneys if the recipients of their instruction are to measure up to the high responsibilities of "polis," or political, beings.

With the coming of the all-new Graham Hall came the dawn of what was to be the brief age of electronic games at Hampden-Sydney. A most anti-intellectual pastime, a game room offered the students of our fair college a rare diversion. Professors, of course, were inherently hostile to this blight upon our academic atmosphere. Talk about the worship of false gods; this was it. There was never anything quite so embarrassing as the Dean's List student seen leaving the hated temple of the money-eaters.

All this may be true, but the moral depravity of today's college student must not be underestimated. The game room was for everyone. Pinball junkies come from all walks of student life. The thing about pinball is that it is a self-defeating habit. In the end, the machine is always the winner. Nothing can be worse than losing to a machine, except not having another quarter with which to try again.

The Pinball Hall of Fame would be a select bunch indeed. This group would include a few students, perhaps one unnamed professor, and a couple of faculty kids. Machines deserve honorable mention as well. The all-time winner would have to be

PINBALL "The Temple of False Gods"

Space Invaders. Others would include: El Bandito, The Incredible Hulk, and Atari Football. Atmosphere is equally important to any successful game room. Where else could one find studiers and partiers together at one time? The synthesized noise track of the room could have been a musician's nightmare drawn from Dante's Inferno. The days of the game room were unfortunately numbered.

Those who considered the game room to be proof of the Philistine tastes of students were relieved to see the room closed in April. The closing was the result of continuing vandalism. Some poor, misguided junkie went so far as to break down the door in order to end his cravings. The pinball crowd had mixed reactions to the closing. Some were heartbroken, bored, and restless for days. Others were glad they could stop pouring money into the damn things. Either way though, cold turkey was tough. Hardcore addicts could still waste quarters at Wright's so all was not lost. In the end, Hampden-Sydney never outgrew pinball; it was taken away. Next year the student rally cry will undoubtedly be: "Bring back weeknight parties and pinball."

Off-Campus Is Better

The images are what stay with you. Old farmhouses in the country; at last a place to call your own. The Treefarm, Leatherwood, Two Fox Farm, The Ranch, The Trailers, and others. Your own plants to grow, and lawns to cut. Walls to cover with bits of your life, and rooms filled with comfort and sound. "The holes in the driveway need filling with sand." The same crew hanging around. Being able to leave school behind, but you miss things too — the price to be paid. Calling Ma and Pa for large chunks of money; feeding yourself and the animals. The Biggie — trying to stay warm in the winter: insulation, plastic-covered windows, sleeping in the library, cutting wood, and buying oil. No Commons food, but who's doing the dishes? Clean the house? The trash goes to the dump. "I gotta get to school . . . Let's get high at home . . . Your girlfriend stays over too much . . . The girls are coming this weekend." Trying, unsuccessfully, to study. The problems are the same; but the perceptions are different.
